

LIW | Leadership, not just leaders

Michael Meaney
Associate Consultant
michael.meaney@liw3.com

Michael has worked as a process facilitator, advisor and coach in a wide variety of organisations over the past fifteen years. His own career in business has spanned management and executive roles in the hospitality sector and setting up and running his own business ventures. More recently, Michael has been instrumental in bringing the latest scientific research on the global and systemic risks of Arctic change to boardrooms and policy makers. Most recently in Davos during the World Economic Forum, 2017.

Michael has always had a strong interest in people and groups and trying to help them understand why they do the things they do. In particular, why groups so often find it difficult to collectively realise the potential and ambitions of its individual members. His client work has a recent focus on business purpose, innovation in multi-stakeholder groups and team coaching. He has worked across public, private and voluntary sectors.

With a psychology, systems and MBA background, Michael takes a creative and expansive approach to process design and is fond of asking 'what if?'

Mini bio

- Specialist in; process design and facilitation and organisation/ team development
- More than fifteen years' experience as a facilitator, advisor and coach in several sectors.

Qualifications

- Open Business School MBA, 1995 – 1997
- The University of Sheffield, BA, Psychology, 1985 – 1988